QiY 18/07/07          Israel and Palestine: presentation by Karen Abi-Ezzi

We welcomed Dr Karen Abi-Ezzi of the Division of Peace Studies and International Development, University of Bradford who focused on the effects of American foreign policy in the Middle East. There are a number of inter-connected conflicts and a general shift from the striving to establish a Palestinian State to the focus on resolving the tensions between Sunni and Shiite Muslims which have been emerging for some time.

Since President Trump came to power, there has been a very significant break with the international consensus which had been a feature of American Foreign policy until then. For a long time, there was an assumed consensus around the idea of a dual state, but with the opening of the Embassy of the United States in Jerusalem, that has receded. Mr Trump allows President Netanyahu to do what he wishes in his aim to establish a new Jewish nation state.

Mr Trump covered his proposed policy in his campaign. The significance of the mid-term elections coming shortly cannot be overlooked and President Trump's ambition to achieve some of his promises. The result has been a huge shift in the Middle East because of crude policies, realignments, alliances and allegiances that we would not have imagined a few years ago. This includes the new law which has gone through the Knesset about the establishment of a nation state for Israel. Nikki Haley United States Ambassador to the United Nations has used strong language to support US policy and is disliked; Jared Kushner<sup>1</sup> has been given huge responsibility.

The crisis in the Gaza Strip is linked to the withholding of funds, with much unemployment and poverty there compared to the West Bank. Hamas has been in power in the Gaza Strip for around ten years. Their power has depleted because of the reduction of Arab backers and there are great tensions with Fatah in the West Bank. There is also a closer alliance between Saudi Arabia and Israel.

Very complex relationships exist throughout the region. Karen summarised these with examples from Yemen, Syria, Qatar as well as Lebanon. There has been a general rise in Shiite rule as in Iran, but Saudi Arabia, with a new younger leader, represents Sunni interests.

Karen felt there was no real leadership from the United States, despite many arms deals such as the major one with Saudi Arabia, and yet leadership is needed if a solution is to be found.

The Trump administration sees President Obama's position on the Iran Nuclear Deal, which led to a lot of trade between Iran and the European Union, as a mistake and the EU has struggled to maintain it.

Following the talk, there were a number of questions from the floor about different aspects of what is happening. On the question of what we might be able to do, Karen said there is a lot of unrest among liberal Jewish young people in the USA who are concerned about the right-wing government in Israel. Perhaps we can seek out Jewish groups we can work with; she was disappointed about the apparent absence of any such initiatives in the UK.

This was a comprehensive yet sobering account for which we thank Karen warmly.
